MGM INDUSTRIES INVESTS IN FIRST AUTOMATED VACUUM SPRAY PAINT COATER FOR UPVC EXTRUSIONS

Hendersonville, Tenn. – MGM Industries is the first vinyl window and door manufacturer in North America to successfully offer painted uPVC profiles for mass production in any exterior color to its customers, with the installation of an innovative automated vacuum coater.

According to Abe Gaskins, president of MGM Industries, they are the first and only window and door manufacturer, at this time, with this innovative technology that enables mass production of painted uPVC extrusions.

“This is a tremendous boost to the industry,” says Gaskins. “Architects and developers now have a choice for painted windows and doors besides clad, at about 50% of the cost.”

The vacuum coater applies an automotive grade finish that resists flaking and peeling, making it durable for the commercial market.

Initially, the company plans to stock their 6010 Series single hung new construction window, the 4600 Series replacement window and the 9000 Series patio door in a bronze exterior on white interior and tan interior. Custom colors are available on a per quote basis. More colors will be added as the market dictates.

After years of researching machinery and paint chemistry, MGM has found the combination of machinery and paint that maximizes adhesion and guarantees consistent coverage to produce commercial grade, painted uPVC windows and doors. They are so sure of their painted products, that they have a 10 year warranty against industry accepted fading and peeling of paint.

Previous attempts, in the fenestration industry, to paint uPVC, on a mass manufacturing scale, produced poor adhesion, resulting in flaking paint that was easy to scratch and simply not durable for the commercial market. Up until this point, vinyl windows and doors only came in two to three colors, white, tan or maybe earthtone.

Founded in 1965 in Hendersonville, Tenn., MGM Industries extrudes and assembles a wide range of custom and standard sized vinyl windows, sliding patio and swing doors for new home construction, light commercial and replacement use. For more information visit them online at www.MgmIndustries.com.
